Rebuke A.J.C. Stand On Israeli Relationship With U.S. Jewry

Rabbi Irving Miller, of Woodmere, L. I., president of the American Jewish Congress, said at Atlantic City, N.J., that Jews in America undoubtedly would reject suggestions of the American Jewish Committee that their relationship to Israel be limited to philanthropic or charitable activities. The rabbi said it was obvious "that such a definition of American-Israel relationship flows out of a rejection by the American Jewish Committee of the unity of the Jewish people, and its insistence upon what might very properly be described as Jewish isolation."

He spoke to 1,000 delegates at the twenty-sixth annual national convention of the Mizrachi Women's Organization of America. The delegates represent 50,000 members of the religious-Zionist Organization.

Mrs. Nachman H. Ebin, of Brooklyn, N. Y., a national vice-president of Mizrachi and chairman of its child restoration program, detailed a vast program of expansion of educational and social service facilities to "accelerate the process of integration of Israel's newest citizens."

Dr. Pinchos Churgin, of New York, national president of the Mizrachi Organization of America, praised the women's organization for "meeting brilliantly" in Israel the problem of synthesizing different cultures and different climates into one unified national characteristic.

Dr. Nahum Goldmann, of New York, co-chairman of the Jewish Agency for Palestine, warned that tendencies toward a revived American-Jewish isolation in respect to Israel had developed since the World Zionist Congress last August. Addressing the thirty-[illegible] annual national convention of the Mizrachi Organization of [illegible] Israel and with the Jewish people of the world."

Hitting out at recent manifestations in American Jewish life that, he said, threatened Jewish unity, Dr. Goldmann said: "These tendencies assumed the form of American Jewish isolationism, a denial of the right of Jewish bodies not exclusively 'American' to deal with American Jewish problems. Such tendencies must not be allowed to become dominant or influential in American Jewish life."

Dr. Churgin charged that an American Jewish Committee resolution opposing a grant of special status by Israel to the World Zionist Organization represented "an unprecedented effort by a single organization to dictate to the Government of Israel" and one that "seeks to establish the American Jewish Committee as the arbiter of the heart and soul of American Jewry."

Dr. Churgin said that resolutions recently adopted by the Committee "bristle with implications which shocked every sincere and patriotic American Jew." The framers of the resolutions, which were actuated by a fear of too close a contact between Israel and the Jewries of other countries, challenged the right of Israel to accord recognition to organized Zionism," he declared. "We must assert that they cannot dictate to Israel what should be its relationship to Jews all over the world."

In a message President Truman praised plans of the religious-Zionist organization to establish the first religious university in Israel as "a significant contribution to universal well-being."

Directors of the Mizrachi national education committee re-elected Rabbi Joseph H. Lookstein of New York to his second term as president. The Mizrachi women's organization elected Mrs. Joshua L. Lewis, of Brooklyn, national president to succeed Mrs. Lionel Golub, also of Brooklyn. The latter was named vice president and chairman of the national board.

A budget of $1,310,000 to maintain and expand projects in Israel in the next twelve months was adopted by the 1,000 delegates to the twenty-sixth annual national convention of the Mizrachi Women's Organization. The delegates, representing 50,000 members of the women's religious-Zionist group, also pledged to sell $1,500,000 of State of Israel bonds as Mizrachi women's participation in that drive in the coming year.

The delegates approved the budget submitted by Mrs. Nathan B. Fischer, of Belle Harbor, Queens, national treasurer, after listening to reports on social services and child care needs in Israel for the last three days. More than one-third of the budget, $485,000, will go toward the maintenance of Youth Aliyah children and the expansion of children's villages and centers in Israel. Three hundred and twenty-seven thousand dollars has been earmarked for social services and settlement house work to aid in the task of integrating newcomers to the Holy Land.

Neo-Nazi Tells Bundestag Israel Is Still Foe

The Bundestag was thrown into an uproar at Bonn, Germany, when Dr. Franz Richter of the neo-Nazi Socialist Reich party declared that Germany was still at war with Israel and anyone sending money there should be denounced as a collaborator with an enemy. "Shame!" and "Phooey!" shouted many members of the Bundestag as Dr. Richter made his remarks.

"What is the use of shouting shame on a man who cannot be ashamed because he is nothing more than an anti-Semite?" called out one member. Dr. Richter, a former schoolteacher, who once was dismissed from his post by British officials because of statements he made to students, has been in similar trouble in the Bundestag before.

"We should not send any money to Israel," said Dr. Richter, in commenting on a motion to correlate the restitution laws of the three Western zones. "This would strengthen the power of the Israelis permanently to withhold the land they stole from the Arabs.

"So far as I know we are at war with Israel. If Professor Carlo Schmid (Socialist Vice-President of the Bundestag) wants to send money to our enemies, then he is a collaborator and ought to be punished just as the Allies punished collaborators with Germans."

The outburst that followed quickly quieted down when the President of the Bundestag called Dr. Richter to order. The motion was then sent to committee.

Heinrich von Brentano, leader in Parliament for Chancellor Konrad Adenauer's Christian Democratic Union, referred to the reports of meetings of former Nazis and said: "We will not tolerate bodies that get together to drink to the health of Hitler and similar monkey business."

Hans Gille, a former S. S. General, who reported to have sent out a call throughout the world for former S. S. men to attend a reunion in Hamburg next spring, according to the New York Times. The Bonn Government has notified consular offices abroad to refuse visas to anyone planning to attend such a rally. Other plans have been made to prevent it.

Meanwhile an article in the latest issues of the Federal Government's Information Bulletin sought to minimize reports of the growing strength of Nazi-type organizations and implied that the purpose of news agencies in reporting such growth was to lessen Germany's store of goodwill abroad.

Israel Is Wary On Mid-East Pact

The Government in Israel is ready and willing to enter into a Middle East Defense alliance with the Western Big Three powers and Turkey — but only on certain definite conditions — according to information in the hands of responsible Western statesmen in Paris, the New York Times reports.

Israeli views on the need for a realistic Middle East defense pact have recently been communicated to Western leaders. These leaders have been told that a potential Israeli army of 200,000 men, many of them combat or underground veterans, would be made available and that bases on Israeli territory and the country's industrial capacity would also be offered to the alliance for the common security of the area.

However, the Israeli Government is said to have made it clear that it wants no fanfare about such an arrangement. It is willing to talk defense with the Western and Turkish Governments through normal existing channels, such as the embassies, legations and military attachés in the respective capitals, but it does not want high level foreign military missions, a grandiose international headquarters, nor well publicized visits by foreign defense officials to its shores.

Israeli views on the problem of Middle East defense are regarded in some Western government circles as hard-headed and realistic, according to the Times. According to these officials, Israeli statesmen have studied the question of Middle East defense profoundly, they have had long personal experience in Arab politics and at the same time they under-

Sharett At U.N. Charges Rebirth Of Nazism

Delegates to the United Nations General Assembly voted in Paris to put the problem of German unification on their agenda in the face of a warning from Israel that the spirit of Nazism was rising in Germany from the ashes of the Hitler regime.

Moshe Sharett, Israeli Foreign Minister, took the assembly rostrum for the first time at this session and argued with emotion against giving a place on the agenda to a suggestion by the United States, France, and Britain that a United Nations commission of inquiry be set up to determine whether free elections could be held throughout occupied Germany.

The only other opposition to a debate on the German item came from the Soviet bloc, which once again renewed all its charges that the West actually was militantly fighting against the unification of Germany. When the vote was taken, forty-seven countries were in favor of upholding the General Committee's recommendation to put the German problem to the agenda. Israel and the five nations in the Soviet bloc were opposed and Burma and Guatemala abstained.

Except for the intervention of Mr. Sharett, the debate on the German question went pretty much according to the formula of Andrei Y. Vishinsky, Soviet Foreign Minister, who led the Soviet bloc's fight against inclusion of the item, says the New York Times.

The Soviet delegate charged that the three Western powers wanted to keep Germany divided. He declared that the German unification problem was not within the competence of the United Nations, but was a matter to be handled by the German people and the Council of Foreign Ministers.

Sir Gladwyn Jebb, British delegate, replied that the idea of a United Nations commission had been put forward by Chancellor Konrad Adenauer of West Germany. He said it was impossible to hold elections without finding out whether individuals could stand for elections without fear of discrimination "or worse."

It was at that point that Mr. Sharett took the floor to protest. He said the central factor in the German situation was that the "Nazi spirit has risen from the ashes of the Hitler regime and is alive and arrogantly unrepentant." He went on:

"Such democratic elements as may have come to the fore in Germany since the end of the war appear to be powerless to suppress and to eradicate that manifestation of the spirit of hatred and revenge," he continued. "This is a dark and ominous feature of the background of the problem that has been brought before the Assembly."

Brandeis U. Seeks $22,000,000

The ninety-fifth birthday anniversary of the late U.S. Supreme Court Justice Louis D. Brandeis was commemorated at a dinner at the Roosevelt Hotel by the Friends of Brandeis University of Greater New York. Dr. Abraham L. Sachar, president of the university, told the assemblage that "the steady rate of growth of the university is a testimonial to the ideals of Justice Brandeis." He noted that Brandeis' student body numbers 700 students from thirty-five states.

W. W. Wachtel, president of Calvert Distillers Corporation, described industry's role in raising funds for colleges and universities a "passive one," and urged that "we make more of the experience and know-how of American industry available to our students as a means of more adequately training them for civic responsibilities."

Other speakers included former State Supreme Court Justice Joseph M. Proskauer, chairman of the New York State Crime Commission, and George Alpert, chairman of the Brandeis University board of trustees. Mr. Alpert said that the university was conducting a $22,000,000 building program, with first priority going to dormitory and classroom facilities.

A.J.C. SEES RUSSIAN JEWS AS GROUP IN DECLINE

Tens of thousands of Soviet Jews are in slave labor camps because of the Kremlin's suspicions that their loyalty cannot be trusted, the American Jewish Committee charged in a report on the status of the 2,000,000 Jews in the Soviet Union. The report, based on evidence gleaned from Soviet publications, accounts from refugees, journalists, visitors to Russia and other sources, suggests that as a group the Jewish population in the Soviet Union has been reduced to its worst status in many years.

Soviet suspicion of Jewish loyalty, the American Jewish Committee stated, is based on fear that the Jews have a "Western" orientation incompatible with the Soviet chauvinism now being fostered by official propaganda. In addition, Soviet authorities fear that Zionist sentiment is strong among Soviet Jews, who have been prohibited, with rare exceptions, from migrating to Israel.

Evidence that there were Jews among slave labor camp inmates was presented in the testimony of former slave laborers and camp officials given during David Rousset's libel action against a pro-Communist French magazine in Paris last January and at the Brussels hearings on Soviet slave labor last May, says the New York Times.

Witnesses at these trials told of a women's camp in the Donets Basin of which only Roman Catholic nuns and Jewish women were the inmates. Another camp in the Karaganda coal basin held only German and Rumanian refugee Jews. A collective farm in Kazakhstan held only Jewish slave laborers. Internment camp No. 99/2 in the Karaganda basin held many Jewish families.

In one slave labor camp in Kazakhstan, one witness reported, Jewish women went on a hunger strike in protest against [illegible] to break up families and succeeded in winning assent for fathers to remain with their families. A former Soviet professor, N. Golubjev, reported in Vienna that there was hardly a Soviet prison cell without Jews, with Jews having particularly high representation among prisoners who formerly were intellectuals or had been expelled from the Communist party.

Other evidence of a worsened position of Soviet Jews, cited in the report, indicated the following:

1. Deportation of Jews from western border areas of the Soviet Union is continuing. This and other post-war developments have resulted in a major geographical shift of Jewish population in the Soviet Union so that about a quarter of them now live in Central Asia.
2. Jews have been virtually eliminated from the highest echelons of Soviet political and public life, the two outstanding exceptions being Politburo member Lazar Kaganovitch and writer Ilya Ehrenburg. Only in the Soviet republics of Central Asia are there still Jews among the secretaries of regional and local party committees. Indicative of the same trend is the fact that the seventy-fifth birthday of former Soviet Foreign Minister Maxim Litvinov passed without notice.
3. A number of anti-Semitic outbreaks have been reported from small Ukrainian towns along with accounts of assaults on individual Jews in Moscow and Odessa. Refugees report Soviet officials are indifferent to Jewish complaints about anti-Semitism and take no effective steps to curb such incidents although anti-Semitic propaganda is still outlawed in the Soviet Union.
4. Between March and June, 1951, Jewish employees in Government departments [illegible] in Odessa, [illegible]

They had crowns of matching flowers in their hair; also bouquets to match. The flower girls were: Roslyn Rabinovitch, of Montreal, Que., in a coral-coloured velvet dress, with matching bonnet, and basket of rose petals; Harriet Racko and Ida Mintz, both in pink satin, with crowns of flowers, and matching bouquet. Sydney Racko was best man. The ushers were: Sydney Rabinovitch, of Montreal, Que.; Morris Waltman, Harry Nicols, of Guelph, Samuel Rochman, and Bernard Mintz. Elliot Mintz, in full dress suit, was ring-bearer. White chrysanthemums and gladioli decorated the Synagogue. The bride's mother wore a gown of cocoa-coloured lace, designed with Queen Anne collar, cap sleeves, matching long gloves, and corsage of yellow roses and chrysanthemums. The groom's mother was in a dusty-rose-coloured net gown, trimmed with rhinestones, and had matching long gloves, and corsage of pink roses and chrysanthemums. For the aeroplane trip to New York City, and Haskensack, N. J., the bride left in a cinnamon-coloured suit, trimmed with velvet, green and cinnamon-coloured accessories, and white orchid corsage. They are residing at 509 McRoberts Avenue.

Forcible blowing of the nose may drive infection into the middle ear through the small tube that lies between throat and ear. Impaired hearing resulting from such infection may be avoided by having periodic examinations of the ears by a medical doctor.

SURE, a trim new Buick makes a might pretty picture when you see it in your driveway, or watch it wheel by.

But if you could get a mechanic's-eye view of this big, broad beauty as it sits on a lift, you'd see an impressive picture of rugged brawn that makes Buicks give such a good account of themselves on the road.

You'd see the full-length torque-tube drive that firms the whole power relay system, and steadies your going like a giant hand beneath you.

You'd see all four wheels cushioned by stout coil springs that are completely service-free, practically breakproof—and a principal reason for the ever-level Buick ride.

But mainly, you'd see the massive foundation that backbones every Buick—the deep, wide, X-member frame that's rugged as a rock, and a brute for strength.

So when you look at the beauty of a Buick—the big mileage power of its valve-in-head Fireball Engine—and the money saving ability of its Dynaflow Drive*—don't overlook the tough stamina that goes with it all.

And whether you're looking at a Buick CUSTOM, a Buick SUPER or a mighty ROADMASTER, don't overlook the fact that a '51 Buick, with all its heft, costs less per pound than any other car of comparable size, structure and weight.

Better come see us first chance you get—and find out what a smart buy this is—from every angle.

NO OTHER CAR PROVIDES ALL THIS:

DYNAFLOW DRIVE*—saves strain on driver and car.
FIREBALL POWER—high-compression, valve-in-head 8-cylinder engines . . . Roadmaster, 152 hp; Super 124 hp; Custom, 120 hp. (Super and Custom with Dynaflow, 128 hp).
PUSH-BAR FOREFRONT—combines smart style and unsurpassed protection.
WHITE-GLOW INSTRUMENTS—greater clarity at night.
TORQUE-TUBE DRIVE—steadies ride, improves driving control.
SELF-ENERGIZING BRAKES—hydraulic—multiply pedal-pressure five times at brake drum.
DREAMLINE STYLING—tapered, car-length fenders, gleaming sweepspears on most models.
Plus Self-locking luggage lid, StepOn parking brake, Two-way ignition lock, Safety-Rim rims, Hi-Poised engine mounting, Body by Fisher.

Synchro-Matic transmission, power steering and brakes are optional at extra cost on all other Series.
Standard on ROADMASTER, optional at extra cost on other Series.

MARRIAGES

SPEISMAN-CLOTH

The marriage of Mary, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Cloth, 197 Palmerston Avenue, to Saul Morris Speisman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Speisman, 393 Spadina Avenue, took place on Sunday, September 23, at six o'clock, at Shaarei Shomayim Synagogue, with Rabbi Judah Washer officiating, assisted by Cantor Nathan Adler. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a white satin and lace gown, fashioned with high stand-up collar, V-neckline, long sleeves, and skirt having a gathered, padded hipline, lace panels falling to a long train. Her seed-pearl-beaded crown held her tulle illusion fingertip veil, and she carried a white Bible, adorned with a mauve orchid and streamers of white stephanotis. Miss Beatrice Cloth, the bride's sister, was maid of honour. She wore a strapless mauve nylon net gown, with matching stole, and large picture hat, and carried a cascade of white and yellow gladioli and roses. The bridesmaids were: Misses Sair Cloth, in blue nylon net strapless gown; and Bella Bloom, in a green nylon net strapless gown. Both had matching stoles, with picture hats, and carried cascades of pale yellow gladioli and Talisman roses. Renee Tobin was flower girl, wearing a pale blue satin gown, with matching picture hat, trimmed with pink roses. She carried a nosegay of mixed flowers. Albert Bloom was best man. The ushers were: Charles Cloth, Saul Speisman, S. Robins, David Silverman, Murray Harold, and Ralph Felgen. Sheldon Goldberg, in full dress, was ring-bearer. Bouquets of white roses and gladioli decorated the Synagogue. The bride's mother wore a champagne-coloured lace gown, with turquoise-blue hat, and corsage of Talisman roses. The groom's mother was in a royal-blue lace gown, with grey feathered hat, and corsage of red and white roses. For the trip to New York, the bride left in a beige checked suit, with matching feathered hat, green accessories, and mauve orchid corsage. They are residing at 197 Palmerston Avenue.

The collecting of Israeli stamps is given added impetus in the booklet "How to Start an Israel Stamp Workshop," published by the Stamp Service of the Youth and Chalutziut Department of the Jewish Agency. The 12-page booklet, profusely illustrated with reproductions of some of Israel's most beautiful and historic stamps, offers suggestions on how to launch an Israel Stamp Workshop, one in which such activities as dramatics, arts, and the study of history are tied in with the collection of Israel stamps. It lists the best media for publicizing stamp workshop activities, the equipment useful in the collection and display of stamps, and contains a glossary of philatelic terms and a complete catalogue of Israel stamps.

When substances normally harmless set up respiratory or digestive disturbances or cause skin rashes, the patient is said to be allergic to that substance. Such substances may enter the body through inhalation, contact, injection or swallowing. Medical science has developed various methods of identifying the cause of the disturbance and can usually help to alleviate the condition.

In the vegetable garden of Kibbutz Mishmar Haemek, of the Kibbutz Artzi federation, in the Valley of Jezreel, tomato plants have been grafted on to plants of the "black solanum," a weed which crops up freely in irrigated lands, to instil resistance to heat and cold. The ten plants grafted last March grew very slowly but bore fruit at the same time as ordinary tomato plants, of the usual color, with a slightly wine-like taste. Those on the lower branches were round and small resembling the solanum and those on the higher branches large and closer to the ordinary tomato. Next year the seed of these fruits will be planted and their qualities tested.

THE LAST JEW IN KOMAROWO

BY J. J. YOSHOR

Vassily rode in the cart; the other three walked. They strove up the cobbled road into the teeth of the wind—the old man, the wife and the four-year-old grandchild. Vassily's nag pulled the cart, a cart so rickety that as it creaked along, it excited more pity than the sickly nag. In the cart, at Vassily's feet, were their bits of possessions—a worn-out blanket, a moldy bread, a torn prayer-book—the distilled treasure of the wanderers, the unbarterables of wandering.

At the corner of Lenin Street, Yankel stopped before a stone house. Its door mottled with leftover slivers of paint, it had been the possessor, unlike its neighbors, of a real shingle roof. But the shingles long ago had been torn off, leaving exposed the wooden underskin.

"My dear wife, wait a moment! I'll go in to davven Minchah with Dovid'l."

Yankel nudged Soreh's ribs as though he had made a huge and clever joke; himself he giggled. She scowled. "Be still," she said.

Vassily scratched his chin in bewilderment. Why did he stop here? This was the house of Pan Gomulka. What did he the Jew want here, in this house? Then he remembered; this house, before the Russians—no, no earlier—before the Germans had come in, this house, it had been a Jew-church—a little Jew-church where men with beards, like that one there, came and went with big books under their arms. What was then the house of the Jews is now the house of Pan Gomulka.

"I am going too," Dovid'l broke in and he spoke in Polish. "I am going, too, with grandpa."

"Yes, yes, my dear Dovid'l. You'll go in with me, too. I'll present you to Reb Leib. But you must promise me to speak Yiddish. Or else Reb Leib will not like you. You are not to speak Polish, only Yiddish, and Reb Leib will pinch your cheek."

"No, I'll speak Polish!"

Yankel slapped his grandson and Dovid'l broke into quick tears, "I'll speak Polish, Polish . . ."

Vassily grinned, "To bad, you're taking him away to Palestine. He's quite a patriot . . . quite a patriot."

Soreh picked up the boy and pressed his head to her bosom. She turned angrily on Yankel. "Why do you make such tricks, such tricks, such insane tricks?" Dovid'l cried louder.

"Tricks?" he mumbled. "Noo, tricks! But this I tell you—this is the Beis Medrash and I will go in and davven and speak to Reb Leib!"

"Stop your tricks!" the woman screamed, beyond patience, and Dovid'l wailed louder, an accompaniment to the confusion. As the yelling and crying rose, some of the perverseness seeped out of Yankel; the hankering after tricks left him. One hand he put on his wife's shoulder and patted her, with the other hand he stroked his beard.

"Evil spirit," he said to her. "My little evil spirit. Nooo! Now we will go. Another time I will speak to Reb Leib. Another time, another place."

She set Dovid'l down, and when he touched ground his whimpering ceased. She smiled to Yankel, smiled and sighed; to the driver she said, "We go on, Vassily. For the station."

With his whip Vassily gently nudged the horse, but gently. "No use hurrying," he muttered. "You are late. Of that no doubt!"

"We cannot be late," Soreh whispered to herself. We cannot! For the sake of Dovid'l we cannot!"

They moved on ahead; the cart lumbered behind, its wheels squeaking, as though agonized by motion. Their boots squished in the mud and the mud stuck fiercely to their boots, as if it would bear them down—these, the last few—into its depths forever. Yankel, Soreh and Dovid'l were Komarowo's only Jews. When these three went, there would be no more Jews left in Komarowo; that is, no more avowed Jews.

Two days after the difficult return from Russia, they had to report to Turek, the People's district sub-Administrator. They stood before him: a blonde, husky person, not too old, whose ruddy face, pimpled here and there, seemed to suggest that this was a man who wielded the Upper Hand with efficacy and enjoyed wielding it. His power had nothing to do, directly speaking, with the crudities of fist and gun, but rather with the delicacies of manifesto and directive. Now as he scribbled busily, he held between his fingers the scepter of his authority—a pencil (it was a brown pencil sharpened to a thin point, Yankel noted). The pencil danced across the page and Yankel's eyes followed its course; for in times of terror it was his habit to fix his consciousness on a small object, as if to say, "Nothing can happen to me. I am innocent and unnoticeable as that small thing."

Tired of the pencil, Yankel shifted his eyes to the district sub-administrator's temples; he gaped at the pimples without purpose or thought. Then, as he became more and more aware of the face, a queer notion knocked at Yankel's mind. He gripped Soreh's arm.

"I know him," he gasped in her ear. "The eyes, the hair, the pimples. I think it was in Lomka that I knew him, but his name I don't . . ."

"Yankel!" she begged, frantically pulling his beard. "No tricks!"

"But I am sure! he insisted. "Just the name I do not . . ."

"Cicho!" snapped the baldish assistant who stood at Turek's elbow. They shut up instantly.

Presently, Turek turned to the assistant. "What are they?" he asked.

The assistant bent his head, and with a fierce eye on those of whom he spoke, gurgled respectfully, "They are Jews."

"Jews!" Turek's forehead twitched as if a mosquito had pricked it. "Jews!"

"From the Soviet, sir. They are repatriates.

"Yes, of course . . . of course," Turek growled. To Yankel it appeared that he was eager to efface the forehead twitch, to efface it with a show of decisiveness. And Yankel knew why: this sub-district administrator with the good Polish name was a Jew. The name he had now was not his true name, not his father's name. In Lomza he was called . . .

"Documents! Your documents!" the man of the Upper Hand demanded. "Do I have to repeat myself ten times, old man!"

Yankel stumbled forward, dazed with remembrance, and laid his documents on the desk.

"He is going to make his tricks," Soreh said to Dovid'l, very frightened, and the baby, though he did not understand, began to cry. Sha, Dovid'l Sha!"

Turek scanned the documents, ruffling them crisply. "They're in order, old man." He looked up at Yankel. "It says you're a tailor. Now we'll put you in the clothing cooperative. You'll be informed of details. As to habitation, we'll likely get you three a room, though naturally you'll have to share it." He hesitated, as does a man who sews when he approaches a difficult stitch.

"You're Jewish," he said finally. "You'll have that to worry about. You must know that there are still fascist dogs slinking about in Komarowo. Constantly we hunt them out, but . . ." He pointed to Dovid'l. "Your grandson, old man. Your grandson. He, I assure you, is altogether safe from fear. He will grow up in the new Poland, and will be as Polish as . . . as . . ." Turek groped for a comparison.

"As you, honored sub-administrator!" offered Yankel.

"As I," Turek nodded, staring hard at the bearded Jew.

"Honored sub-administrator!" Yankel blurted. "Have you ever been to . . . to Lomza!"

"I have never been in Lomza," pronounced Turek. He stood up and walked over to Yankel. "Come, old man, I'll help you to the door."

"Allow me to, sir," hastened the assistant.

"No, no! Come to think of it, bring me that file on potato crops."

The assistant bowed and fluttered out of the room.

"Old man," said Turek, eyeing Yankel intently, "I have never been in Lomza."

"Assuredly not, sir," Soreh gulped, "assuredly not. It is his tricks, his tricks of memory."

"Indeed, tricks of memory. Take care, little mother, that his tricks of memory don't bring you to distress. For your kind especially needs good luck. It is not always easy to contain the fascists."

"He meant only a joke, a trick, honored sub-administrator," Soreh repeated nervously. "That's all he meant. He merely meant . . ."

Turek motioned for her to be quiet. He sat down at his desk again and toyed with his well-sharpened pencil. "Good day!" he declared, with a gesture of dismissal.

Soreh, curtsied, and holding Dovid'l tightly in her arms, she went out, indicating with her shoulder that Yankel should follow. But he lingered, tossing in his mind this man's secret: whether to speak it or to be silent on it, whether to spit it out or swallow it up. Then he stopped thinking and blurted it.

"Morgenstern! I knew your father well!"

The reaction on the district sub-administrator was as marked and swift as on a piece of cloth that one dips into a basin of dye. His face flushed; his cheeks quivered like bubbles. The pimples on his forehead seemed to sink into the rest of his skin and merge with it. He gulped as if he wanted to make a reply, but just then his assistant entered and he hastened to disemble.

Yankel closed the door and

Childhood ailments, most of them preventable, often have after-effects that cause susceptibility to respiratory or digestive disturbances in the adult years. Impaired hearing and eyesight are also often the legacies of some childhood disease that could have been prevented by immunization.

Household pets may carry germs of contagious disease to humans if they are permitted to come in contact with patients suffering from such illness. Dogs are particularly susceptible to scarlet fever and may carry the germs.

Social Notes — Montreal

(Additional Montreal Social Notes on Pages Two and Three)

Arthur Bernard Cohen, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Cohen, Dollard Avenue, was called to the Reading of the Law at Adath Israel Synagogue in celebration of his bar-mitzvah. He is the brother of Basil, grandson of Mrs. M. Selette, Linton Avenue, and of the late M. Selette; and of M. Cohen, Querbes Avenue, and the late Mrs. Cohen. Kiddush was observed. Mrs Cohen wore a black bengaline suit, styled with V-shaped neckline, three-quarter-length sleeves, and a slim skirt; with a black felt hat, trimmed with rhinestone beading. A dinner was given the following day, with one hundred and twenty guests. Receiving, Mrs. Cohen wore a cocoa-colored crepe gown, trimmed with lace. Cut with a heart-shaped neckline and lace yoke, it had long lace sleeves, and a slim skirt, draped with lace; and her corsage was of Talisman roses. Seated at the head table were: Mr. and Mrs. Cohen, with their sons, Arthur Bernard and Basil; Mr. Cohen, the grandfather; Mr. and Mrs. H. Cohen, Wiseman Avenue, uncle and aunt; Mr. and Mrs. L. Sambad, Esplanade Avenue, great-uncle and great-aunt; Rabbi Charles Bender, and Cantor and Mrs. Eugene Goldberger. Rabbi Bender and Arthur Bernard spoke. For the head table there were two arrangements of roses, carnations, and chrysanthemums, with an inscribed cake; and the small tables were centered with vases of similar flowers.

Miss Ann Kauffman, 2505 Van Horne Avenue, assisted by her mother, Mrs. L. Kauffman, and by Miss Rae Wyneberg, Queen Mary Road, gave a surprise shower and tea to honor Miss Ann Morrison, Willowdale Avenue, fiancee of Mac Malamud, St. Urbain Street, and a bride-elect of November 24. Miss Kauffman wore a black crepe cocktail dress, made with high neckline, and pencil-slim skirt, with pearl bead accessories; Mrs. L. Kauffman, a black crepe dress, with white accessories; and Miss Wyneberg, a blue suit-dress with a beige cocktail blouse. Miss Morrison, the honoree, wore a black crepe dress, designed with a round neckline, Peter Pan collar, and pencil-slim skirt, with gold-shaded scroll embroidery on the collar and cuffs of the short sleeves; and had gold-shaded accessories, and a black velvet hat. Present were: Miss Sue Morrison, sister of the bride-elect; Misses Etta Crystal, Anne Beldick, Minnie Samuels; Mesdames S. Rose, Charles Gillman, Moe Abrams, George Abrams, Si. Levy; Mrs. S. Samuels of New Glasgow, N. S., and Mrs. Saul Gillman, Bourret Avenue, who poured, assisted by her daughter, Miss Lila Gillman. Mesdames Louis Garellek, Mary Dubord, P. Krupp; and Miss Esther Backman were unable to be present. The shower presentation was a dinner-set, service for twelve. Vases of yellow and white pom-poms were used to decorate the living room, and the table was set with a yellow satin cloth, with white and yellow lighted tapers in silver candelabra.

Three Israelis Study In N.Y.

Among the hundreds of youthful scholars who gathered at Yeshiva University this fall were three veterans of the Arab-Israeli war—one of them wounded in commando fighting with the famed Palmach. The three youths, Zvi Sdehen, of Emek Israel; Benjamin Pushowitz, of Petach Tikvah; and Simcha Mandelbaum, of Jerusalem, are part of a contingent of 15 Israelis and more than 30 other students from all parts of the world, currently attending the University. Although they are enjoying their stay and are appreciative of the opportunity for an American education, none consider settling in America permanently.

Although all three served in the war, none knows better what it means to "get it with blood" than 20-year-old Zvi Sdehen. Two years in hospitals in this country and in Israel may have something to do with his air of solemnity and quiet deliberation, the manner of a person who has had more than a passing acquaintance with pain. Born on a moshav, dark-haired Zvi was 16 when fighting broke out. He joined the Palmach (a mobile fighting group somewhat like our commandos). Six months later, in an attempt to take Lydda Airport, Israel's chief airport, near Tel-Aviv, Zvi received serious bullet wounds in his right arm and leg. At 18 and a half, his fighting days were over.

Zvi spent a year in Israel hospitals. His leg healed, but the wound in his arm was more serious. It was a nerve injury—the most painful kind. A certain rare operation involving the removal of a ganglia from his shoulder might alleviate the pain, but there were no doctors in Israel who would attempt it. Zvi's parents decided to send him to America. He arrived in July, 1949, and entered Mount Sinai Hospital, in New York. One year and five operations later, Zvi was able to leave the hospital. He still has only partial use of his right hand, but he is confident that in time he will regain its full use. Meanwhile, taking no chances, he has taught himself to write with his left hand.

Fighting seems to agree with blond, good-looking Benjamin Pushowitz, who has a quiet authority and warm humor which make him seem older than his 21 years. Although as a Yeshiva student, he could have been exempted from fighting, he served with the Tuvia, which was part of the Moriah, a special regiment recruited from among the religious elements. He hopes to get "Semicha" before returning to Israel, but his real ambition is to be an economist.

A seventh-generation Israeli, Simcha Mandelbaum boasts the oldest family lineage of the trio. Simcha's great-grandfather was the founder of Petach Tikvah and his grandfather built the first stocking factory in Israel. The Mandelbaum Gate, near his family home, is one of Jerusalem's most famous landmarks. Located at a strategic point at the conjunction of two important roads, one leading from Rom-Allah and Jericho and the other from the Old City, his home was used as a headquarters and fort by the Haganah. After many months of fierce guerilla fighting during which it changed hands twelve times, it was finally destroyed by Arab bombs in June, 1948. Simcha spent part of his life on a kibbutz. Witty and diplomatic, he has the reputation of being the real charmer of the trio and is reported to have made a great hit with American girls.

Find Diary Of Scout On Indian Fight

The discovery of a diary kept during one of the most exciting Indian fights in American history by Sigmund Shlesinger, a young Jewish scout from Cleveland, Ohio, was announced by Dr. Jacob R. Marcus, director of the American Jewish Archives of the Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion. The diary, an important historical find, was located after a three-year search by the Archives, a College-Institute department which collects, classifies, preserves and publishes manuscript material dealing with the life of the Jews in North America. The techniques of the scholar, the researcher and the sleuth merge in the methodology of the Archives, which literally seeks out and makes available to historians and scholars the documents and records that tell the story of the role of American Jewry in the settlement, founding and development of the United States.

Scrawled during the Battle of Beecher Island, the diary adds new light to the role played by Shlesinger, "the little Jew," immortalized by historians, who, as one of a band of fifty mounted scouts held off about a thousand Cheyenne and Sioux warriors for nine days during September, 1868. A lad of nineteen among a group of Civil War veterans, Shlesinger wrote of the fury of the attack, the lack of "grubb," of killing and eating a coyote; and of the point during the battle when he "scalpt 3 Indians which were found about 15 feet from my hole concealed in Grass." The encounter took place on a sandy island in the Arickaree River, south of Wray, Colorado, and it was here that Roman Nose, the great war chief of the Cheyennes, was killed in his attempt to destroy the scouts who had come in search of Indians pillaging eastern Kansas.

Under the direction of Dr. Marcus, who is Adolph S. Ochs Professor of Jewish History at the Cincinnati school of the College-Institute as well as director of the American Jewish Archives, researchers had for years been following historical clues in a hunt for additional material about Shlesinger. They queried Ohio historical societies and libraries and searched all available records. However, it was a result of the Archives' continuous general quest for Jewish Americana that the diary was found.

In Rochester, N. Y., Mrs. Horace Hart, a distant relative of the Indian scout, heard of the work of the Archives in preserving the living history of the Jew in America and learned of its systematic search for manuscripts, journals and other documents for its collections. She volunteered the information that led the researchers to Shlesinger's daughter, Mrs. Max Frankenberg, of Charleston, W.Va., possessor of the diary.

Shlesinger's exploits were recorded in General Fry's "Army Sacrifices" and Cyrus Townsend Brady's "Indian Fights And Fighters". It was of Shlesinger that Fry wrote:

"When the foe charged on the breastworks
With the madness of despair
And the bravest souls were tested,
The Little Jew was there."

Founded in 1947, the Archives already possesses an impressive collection of Jewish Americana, dating back to pre-Colonial times. The department publishes the historical magazine, American Jewish Archives, and serves as a research center for historians and scholars concerned with the role of the Jew in American life. The archives invites contributions of documents of historical interest and is equipped to make reproductions of items sent on loan, returning the originals to their owners.

caught up with Soreh. For the next three years, he did not forget the district sub-administrator's expression, though to conjure it up made him shiver.

If it had not been for Dovid'l, Yankel and Soreh would probably not have taken it on themselves to leave their village and journey to the Jewish state. Strangely, the townspeople left them in peace, and in their old age they were loath to squander tranquility. But here was Dovid'l, growing up into a world where Yiddish was not spoken, where Jewishness was not lived; where there was no longer any one to speak it or live it.

And Yankel made "tricks" as Soreh called them. They were his senile recoil against the Change: the non-presence of those who used to be, the non-existence of that which was. Of a sudden, he would say to Soreh, "I will go to Kaplan's for some new thread." Or, "I think, I will play some chess with Yablonsky." Soreh, a woman who never appreciated her husband's whimsicalities, alternately pitied him and raged at him; mostly she raged.

ONE IN TEN

A million Canadians now have jobs in manufacturing. Ten per cent of these are in the primary textile industry. (The latest Dominion Bureau figures are 1,080,000 in manufacturing and 104,000 of these in primary textiles.)

Besides leading all other Canadian industries in numbers employed in manufacturing, primary textiles also is away ahead in the size of its payroll. It is up among the leaders in providing jobs for women and in being well spread out through the smaller communities.

Dominion Textile is a considerable part of this basic textile industry.

Plant First Tree In Israel For Nameless Victims

In the rocky Judean hills, where nothing much except scrub has grown for centuries, the first tree of an "American Forest in Memory of the Nameless Martyrs" was planted by Ira A. Hirschmann of New York. Another sapling was planted by Ambassador Monnett B. Davis.

Representatives of many thousands of Jews from the Balkans whom Mr. Hirschmann helped to save from the Nazis during a wartime mission as special representative of President Roosevelt, attended the ceremony at which a commemorative scroll by the Jewish National Fund was presented to Mr. Hirschmann as a tribute to his rescue work.

The American forest will be part of a huge woodlands with which the Jewish National Fund is covering the Judean hills as a means of land reclamation and as a memorial to the 6,000,000 Jews killed by the Nazis. The woodlands will have fourteen sections, each representing one of the Jewish communities that perished by persecution.

The section inaugurated will be planted by American Jews in memory of those who died unrecorded—the "nameless martyrs of our people," as Dr. A. Granott, chairman of the fund's board of directors, described them in a speech honoring Mr. Hirschmann as "a man for whom the concept of humanity is not an empty phrase."

Agricultural training for 350 youths will be provided at a new $840,000 agricultural boarding school now being built on a 250 acre site of Jewish National Fund land by the Working Women's Council in co-operation with the Pioneer Women of America.

• CANADIAN JEWISH Congress: Saul Hayes, national executive director, said that his organization is seriously concerned with the problem of the alleged policy of the Protestant School authorities of Hampstead in refusing to admit Jewish children resident in that area. "The position of the Canadian Jewish Congress is simply that every child in this Province has basic right under our democratic system to general education. Indeed, provincial legislation makes such education compulsory. We will resist any attempt to deprive Jewish children from their right and due for we consider it an assault on the democratic practices which Canada and the Province of Quebec have so long championed," he said. The Congress has addressed itself to the School Commissioners of Hampstead asking for a clarification of their policy in regard to the admission of Jewish children. "Although our letter was sent some months ago we have been favoured with only an acknowledgement but not a reply. Our further policy will be determined in the light of the attitude taken by the school authorities", Mr. Hayes said. "The problem is under very active consideration." Madaule is the author of a recent book on the State of Israel which he visited on the invitation of the Jewish Agency for Palestine. It is one of the most out-spoken pro-Israeli books in current Catholic literature. During the war, M. Madaule, together with the Jesuit priest, Father Chaillet, led the underground resistance effort to rescue the Jewish victims of the Nazis in France. He published a Catholic periodical in the underground to counter the anti-Semitic propaganda of the Nazis during the war and continued his pro-Jewish activities after the war, in conjunction with other Catholic leaders in France. He helped to organize the L'Amitié Judéo Chrétienne, the French counterpart of the Conference of Christians and Jews. M. Madaule has acted as spokesman for the culture of France overseas and has been delegated by the Alliance Française to tour universities all over the world to lecture on literature. A year ago he travelled across Canada to deliver academic addresses at various universities, including the University of Montreal which invited M. Madaule, to return to the Province of Quebec to deliver a series of lectures. A. J. Rosenstein, president of the Cercle Juif, will preside on Monday evening. To help the food budget without losing the vitamins, proteins and minerals necessary for health, substitute dried beans, peas, cheese or eggs at least once a week, in place of the more expensive cuts of meat. Salads, too, are a healthful addition to the daily diet.

A century ago, 40 years was the average life expectancy, but today it is 68 years for men and 65 for women. As the population grows older there is a natural increase in the diseases of old age.

Balanced meals, with the necessary vitamins, proteins and minerals, although in smaller quantities than for younger people, will help the aged person to keep his good health.

School To Build Fashion Prestige Of Israel

A fashion show of clothes designed and made in Israel was presented in New York to the Central Chapter of Hadassah, the women's Zionist organization of America, at a luncheon in the Plaza Hotel. Hadassah supports the fashion and design institute in Israel where the clothes shown were made. Further support for the school is expected from the membership as a result of seeing the fashion show, which illustrated the work being done with funds raised previously.

The tailoring and dressmaking of the clothes was up to professional standards in most instances, says the New York Times. Fabrics and materials came from France and America. The school, opened two years ago, expects to build the fashion prestige of Israel, hoping that the country will one day become one of the fashion centers of the world. As the students finish the course there they will try to find positions in the Paris couture.

About twenty costumes shown will be sent throughout the United States to the different chapters of Hadassah. Although some of the designs were typical American and French adaptations, others were obviously influenced by local costumes. One was made like a prayer coat worn by the Bokharian rabbis in Jerusalem. Its remarkably simple lines fit in easily to current fashion trends. It was similar to the Chinese coolie coat or the American duster.

A new trade agreement involving $14,000,000 worth of purchases by Israel from Finland was signed on November 6 by Dr. Gershon Meron and A. Kaila, heads of the Israel and Finnish delegations, respectively. Israel will export $7,000,000 worth of goods, including automobiles, citrus products, textile and other manufactured goods, and will purchase paper of all sorts, sacks for cement, timber, wooden prefabricated houses, railroad ties, telephone poles, machinery and food products. The difference between the value of exports and imports will be paid in accordance with special payment terms granted Israel by the Finnish Government. The present trade agreement is the third to be entered between the two countries. The previous agreement involved an amount of $3,500,000 which was increased during the year.

The Virtue Of Hospitality

"And (Abraham) sat in the tent door, in the heat of the day; . . . and lo, three men stood over against him; and when he saw them, he ran to meet them." (Genesis 18:1-2)

The Torah portion for the Sabbath contained many moral lessons arising out of the life experience of Abraham, the first Jew. One is deeply touched by Abraham's intercession on behalf of the people of Sodom and Gemorol What a great pleader he proved to be, asking of God that these cities, destined to be destroyed because of the evil prevalent therein, might yet be saved because of the few righteous that dwell therein. This was so characteristic of Abraham's religion which made itself manifest in the Patriarch's love for mankind.

One is struck too, that in this Torah portion, we learn for the first time as to the origin of Beer-Sheba. How up to date is the Bible! For but recently, we stood in the frontier town of Beer-Sheba, which now plays such an important role in the life and development of the New State of Israel. Beer-Sheba is the gateway to the Negev, stretching 150 miles over desert to the Red Sea.

Then, too, in this week's portion of the Torah, there is the dramatic story of the sacrifice of Isaac. The Akeda, which plays such an important part in the literature of our people, was written with the purpose to protest against human sacrifice. When the heathens in whose midst Abraham dwelt indulged in human sacrifice, God of Abraham was opposed to such inhuman practices and hence the origin of animal sacrifice as a substitute came into use. But the great prophets of Israel in their day advanced further the cause of great religion, when the sacrificial cult was abolished and prayer was instituted instead. The Akeda story is the very root which gave rise to the concept of martyrdom for the faith. Abraham so loved his God and his faith that he did not hesitate to offer as a possible sacrifice his only beloved son, Isaac.

But the theme that we wish to stress most, arising out of the Torah portion of the past week, is that of the virtue of hospitality. Behold, this lovely portrait of the old Patriarch Abraham sitting by the open tent, scanning the horizon to see if perchance there may be weary travellers whom he may gather in his home. He sees three strangers approaching and he rushes to meet them and offers to entertain them and these three strangers turn out to be angels.

Out of this experience of Abraham has come into Jewish life the noble tradition of Hachnosses Orchim. The Jewish home has ever been wide open to welcome the stranger, in particular on Sabbaths and feast days. We believe that the very opening of the door at the Seder feast on Passover night was merely a practice to invite the stranger that he might partake of the Seder feast. Hospitality is a leading principle in Jewish life and is in the category of prayer and that of the honour of parents.

Job, in defending his fidelity to the word of God, brings forth the record of his hospitality which he extended to the stranger. The Talmud says that it was the practice in the City of Jerusalem to hang out a flag in front of the door of homes at the time when the meal was being served and this flag was the symbol of welcoming those strangers who might wish to partake of the home hospitality. Jose B. Yochenon declared, "Let thy house be open wide and let the poor be reckoned as members of thy household."

In the Middle Ages in particular and in modern times Jewish homes were especially open wide to scholars and students. Who does not remember a grandfather returning from the synagogue after Sabbath worship and being accompanied by a stranger who was the special guest at home for the Sabbath meal?

We never know how often the strangers we entertain may be the very angels who may bring us enlargement of our own mental horizons, because of the hospitality we have shown them. For many people life seems self-sufficient and pretty narrow. But blessed and enriched is that life which shares with others and gives poetry and meaning to our pilgrimage upon earth.

There is a form of hospitality which has to do with the human mind. How hospitable is our own mind to new ideas? One danger of advancing years is that we get into a groove. We fight shy of new ideas. We shut the doors of our mind and we only consider that which is old as truth. Blessed is the man or woman whose windows of the soul are kept wide open to new truths and new revelations which are made manifest daily.

Of course, every old idea is not obsolete, nor is every new idea a heaven-sent angel. But the growing mind is ever receptive and this mind makes possible human advancements and human progress. The pioneers of human thought have suffered most because of the reaction against new ideas on the part of those who refuse hospitality of mind to new truths.

Let us, therefore, as we read and re-read the story of Abraham sitting at the tent door, welcoming strangers, ever find inspiration in that story to practice the virtue of hospitality. Let us keep the doors of our homes wide open to those who are lonely and in need especially of human fellowship and let us, too, keep the doors of our minds open that we may grow in soul.

ISRAEL IS WARY

stand the Western powers' difficulties in trying to weld the Middle East into a cohesive alliance. The Israeli point of view, therefore, is respected.

It is interpreted by Western statesmen about as follows:

First, Israeli leaders are still not convinced that the Western nations, the United States, Britain and France, plus Turkey, are prepared to defend the Middle East in case of a sudden Soviet attack. The Israelis are not convinced that the Western nations have the necessary strength to do this, according to some persons with whom they have recently talked, and they need more persuasion than they have had so far.

Second, the Israelis are disillusioned at what they call the West's efforts to appease the Arab states, notably Egypt. The Israelis have fought the Arabs and have no high regard for the power of Arab arms. They have even less regard for the political stability of the Arab countries and no respect at all for the Arabs' devotion to "democracy."

"Arab philosophy in wartime is clear," said an Israeli official recently to a Western diplomat. "If you are weak you don't deserve Arab support; if you are strong you don't need it; therefore it is best to wait till the last moment to see who is weak and who is strong."

Third, Israeli leaders have told Western officials that of all the Middle East states only Israel and Turkey can be counted on to fight for democracy against Soviet aggression. Therefore, the Israelis have argued that the West should devote its limited energies to creating a defense alliance around these two states—with the likelihood that the Arabs would, sooner or later, join the arrangement if it seemed to be effective.

Fourth, compared to the instability and military weakness of most Arab countries, Israeli diplomats have pointed out, Israel has tested military experience, organizational ability and, above all, the "Western" point of view. It also has the support of the Jewish communities throughout the world.

Counter-balancing the advantages that the entry of Israel would bring to any Middle East alliance, some Israelis have told Western statesmen that the newborn State of Israel would also be taking a very decided risk in aligning herself too publicly with Western power against the Soviet Union. In the first place, there are nearly 2,000,000 Jews still behind the Iron Curtain. The fate of these co-religionists is said to weigh heavily on Israeli thinking.

Also because she is a small power surfeited with immigrants and barely managing to keep afloat economically, Israel cannot be expected to assume a heavy defense burden without considerable outside aid — both economic and military. Such aid would be an absolute prerequisite to any defense commitment, Western officials have been told, says the New York Times.

The Israelis are said, therefore, to be in no hurry to join the projected Middle East pact. In the first place, they realize how difficult it will be for the West to bridge the gap between themselves and the Arabs. They are said to think that "haste makes waste" and that the Western states should not try to hasten an alliance by "bringing" the Arabs to come into it.

But in the coming months, when the part begins to take form around the United States, Britain, France and Turkey and the British dominions—the Israelis would like —very quietly—to be offered an admission ticket, according to those who would be in a position to offer such a ticket.

THE JEWS IN THE SOVIET UNION: NO POLICY OF ANTI-SEMITISM

BY DR. N. SARDI, OF LONDON, ENGLAND, FEATURE WRITER FOR WORLD JEWISH AFFAIRS OF THE WORLD JEWISH CONGRESS.

The numerous books written about the Soviet Union explain Soviet developments by three main factors: The geographical position and multi-national population of the vast country, its historical and cultural background, and the aims and methods of the Communist Party. Different authors emphasize the influence of one or the other of those facts, mainly in accordance with their political likes and dislikes.

Solomon M. Schwarz, author of "The Jews In The Soviet Union" (recently published by Syracuse University Press) belongs to those who are highly critical of the Soviet Communist Party, which he regards as the dominating force in Soviet development. In his book he has accumulated a wealth of historical and factual information and tries to support his interpretation by a great number of original quotations—predominantly from Soviet sources. By assembling this valuable information and by adding an excellent bibliography of publications little known outside the USSR, he has written a book which will be of great help to every student of the subject.

Mr. Schwarz is less successful, in analysis and argument than in collection of material. As a lifelong member of the Menshevist group of Russian Social Democracy, which never offered any solution to the Jewish question apart from assimilation, he almost ignores the theory and political work of the Poale Zion, the only Jewish Labour Party in the Soviet Union (dissolved as late as 1928), which offered an alternative to the classical Communist, that is, assimilationist, approach to the Jewish question.

However, Mr. Schwarz tries hard to deal with the subject in an academic and objective manner. Unfortunately, he does not succeed. Even the structure of his book, one third of which is devoted to the origin and development of anti-Semitism in the USSR, shows the real purpose of the author: To prove that anti-Semitism remained a force in the USSR and that it has been growing rapidly since the end of World War II.

Unfortunately, the cold war is being carried on in dangerously overheated language and in certain circles it is becoming a habit to throw in anti-Semitism when listing other standard accusations against the USSR. What are the facts?

Tsarist Russia left behind a great inheritance of anti-Semitism which was not easy to eradicate in one generation, even though the Soviet Government made anti-Semitism a punishable offence. World War II (with its strange interlude of Russian-German understanding during the 1939-41 period) was accompanied by most effective German anti-Semitic propaganda, especially in the occupied regions. It revived and activated the dormant seed of anti-Jewish hatred among various groups of the population in the Ukraine, White Russia and the Crimea. The Soviet Government had a good deal of trouble in dealing with this dangerous disease after the war. It could not tolerate anti-Semitism without betraying the main principles of the Soviet policy of nationalities or without greatly damaging the foundations of this policy.

And yet, the strong isolationist stand of the Soviet Union during the last few years, the glorification of great Russian achievements, the fight against "Cosmopolitanism" (the chief manifestations of the new anti-Western policy) resulted in attacks against some highly assimilated writers of Jewish origin. These attacks, however, were not directed against their Jewish creative work, as they were not active as Jewish authors, but were part of the general political campaign and should not be confused with anti-Semitism.

Bolshevists pride themselves on being a Marxist-Leninist-Stalinist Party. Doctrine and practice of their policy of nationalities rest on Stalin's assumption that "common territory was to be regarded as an essential characteristic of a nation and that, where there was no common territory, only the concept of a tribe . . . and ethnological category" applied (p. 31).

As early as 1921, the Tenth Party Convention emphatically stated that the task of the Party was "to assist the toiling masses of the non-Great Russian peoples in catching up with Great Russia which has far outstripped them and to help them to develop and consolidate their own Soviet State System in forms consistent with these peoples' national way of life, using the native tongue and staffed by local people familiar with the customs and psychological characteristics of the local population (p. 37).

From this it appears that the glorification of Great Russia as an example to all other nationalities within the Soviet Union started long before the outbreak of the second World War.

The same Party Convention directed ". . . to train indigenous personnel as skilled workers and as Soviet and Party staff members in all spheres of administration and, above all, in the sphere of education."

Since the early days of the October Revolution great efforts have been made by the Party to educate new cadres among non-Russian nationalities and to recruit members from all of them. This made it possible to have an All-Union Communist programme and policy presented to every nationality, built on a firm territorial foundation by its own nationals and in its own language.

Only one national group did not offer the Communist Party those "territorial" opportunities and, because of this, the development of the Jews in the USSR differs radically from that of all other nationalities.

The position of the Jews, the only Soviet non-territorial groups spread as a minority over the European part of the country, deteriorated considerably after the formation of the Soviet Federation. The Bolshevist Party and its leaders had for a long time opposed Federalism and refused to accept it as their doctrine. After five years of revolutionary experience the Party came to the conclusion that it had to change its policy. On December 30th, 1922, the Congress of the Soviets "unanimously decided to form the Union of the Soviet Socialist Republics forming one United State".

The Party, however, applied its own method of organisation to every composite part of the Soviet Union. It organised every Republic and every smaller unit through its own Communist Party. The Soviet Union was kept alive and united through one Centralised Communist Party with a Single Central Committee (p. 65). Mr. Schwarz's remark that "the Federal Organization of the Soviet Union was merely a facade" ignores the essential fact that the Bolshevist Party was from its early beginnings a highly centralised organisation fighting for the creation of a one-party political system in which the Central Committee of the Party held the predominant power.

The formation of a Soviet Federation, made up of dozens of territorial national units, each using its own personnel and language in administration, culture and education, erected barriers between the Jews living in different national units, compelling them to adjust themselves to new conditions. This was not easy to do.

The Bolshevist Party had refused since its early beginnings to regard Jews as a national group. Lenin formulated this view as early as 1903 when he wrote: "The idea of a separate Jewish people, which is utterly untenable scientifically, is reactionary in its political implications. The Jewish question is this exactly: assimilation or separateness" (p. 50). Lenin quotes Kautsky in support of this view and we know that Kautsky went much further in writing: "We are not entirely free of the Ghetto as long as Jewry still exists in our midst. The sooner it disappears, the better for society and for the Jews themselves." (p. 57).

Stalin followed Lenin's lead and, in 1913, wrote about Jews: "If they have anything left in common, it is religion, common descent and certain vestiges of a national character." (p. 54). This, however, Stalin finds insufficient to maintain Jews as a national group and indicates that the increasing mobility of nationalities, characteristic of higher forms of Capitalism, leads to the assimilation of the Jews (p. 59).

Jewish developments have not followed these predictions. Israel negates Stalin's conception of the Jewish people. Freed from the shackles of Tsarist tyranny and oppression, the Jewish population of the Soviet Union has made great efforts to adjust itself to the changing social system. It supplied in a very short time hundreds of thousands of workers and employees who played an important part in the administration, industrialisation and rebuilding of the country and, later, in its defence. The participation of Jewish labour in agricultural production also increased.

As a result of these developments a new idea, the establishment of a Jewish territory, a Jewish State Unit, took shape. It was actively promoted by Mr. Kalinin, President of the USSR, and by a group of non-Jewish Communists. The Jewish Communists were at first frightened at the idea of strengthening the National Jewish Soviet Statehood in the USSR, but accepted it gradually and eventually supported the Biro Bidjan project.

The history of the Biro Bidjan experiment is one of the best chapters in the book. Mr. Schwarz shows clearly why it was a complete failure: After nearly a quarter of a century only one per cent of all Jews found a new home in Biro Bidjan (Pages 174-195).

The present position of Soviet Jewry is precarious. The Nazis exterminated more than half of the Jewish population in Soviet territories, which is now reduced to about two millions. Their geographical distribution has changed beyond recognition. Great numbers now live outside the Ukraine and White Russia, the old centres of Jewish settlement. The economic structure of the Jewish population has improved considerably. The larger part of them are occupied as workers and employees and many play an important part among the professional groups and technicians.

But Jews now have no social or political organisation of their own (not even Jewish units in the Communist organisations), no press, no educational institutions except for a few schools in Biro Bidjan. As a religious group they maintain a few synagogues and religious institutions.

They are completely cut off from the Jewish communities abroad and have no contact even with the remnants of Jewish communities in Poland, Czechoslovakia, Rumania, Hungary or Bulgaria. Nothing is written or published in the USSR about Jewish life or Jewish creative work and the "conspiracy of silence" serves as a very useful weapon in the hands of the enemies of the Soviet Union.

Nobody can predict whether Soviet Jewry will survive as a national and ethnic group; but the practice of depriving the Jews of all means of collective self-expression, their isolation from any organised contact with other parts of world Jewry stands in full contradiction to the declared policy of the Soviet Union and to the interests of the Union and Jewry alike. There is no evidence that the policy of the Soviet Union towards the Jews is motivated by anti-Semitism, but it is high time that this policy should be revised to conform with the political and social reality that there is a Jewish people and that Soviet Jews are part of it.

The establishment of the State of Israel, to which the Soviet Union has given such effective assistance in the United Nations, proves beyond doubt that the assimilationists' expectations are out-dated.

Minsk and other cities were obliged to answer detailed questions about their communications with relatives and friends in Israel or with Israeli diplomatic personnel in Moscow. A number of these Jews in Odessa were deported and one was arrested because he had received an Israeli Embassy bulletin. Four trade union officials in Minsk were dismissed for receiving Jewish periodicals.

6. There are no Jewish schools, periodicals, cultural organizations or other communal organs in the Soviet Union except for a few synagogues. Moscow, which has about 30,000 Jews, has three synagogues. One British visitor to the Soviet Union was told by Rabbi Shlomo Schleifer of a Moscow synagogue that there were no Yiddish or Hebrew publications in the Soviet Union and that kosher food was normally not available, although special supplies would be obtained for holidays.
8. Jewish rabbis are no longer seen at official Soviet functions, although formerly included with representatives of the Christian and Moslem faiths. A Committee for the Defense of Peace organized by the Soviet Government last summer included Russian Orthodox, Lutheran, Armenian Orthodox and Moslem clergymen, but no rabbis.
7. Birobijan has been virtually abandoned as the site of a Jewish national home.
8. Soviet comment on Israel during the last year has constantly assailed that country as a puppet of United States capitalism that is building up its military strength "to prepare for war against the Soviet Union."
